Commander and Deserter: Two Poems.

The poems "Vulture" by Chinese Achille and "What were they like?" by Denise Levertov are the same in that they both about war and conflict between two different tribes or regions within one country. Both poems reflect the effects of war and how war dramatically change history.

Chinese Achille uses vulture to explore his thought and ideas of war. He starts by introducing us to their final diet of dead humans and animal flesh, and then they appear to war and live for one another. Achille feels that people should be hopeful that the goodness and love will one day overcome the evil (inside others on that deep down there for goodness) and love is what the world mean evil people, like Adolph Hitler for example.

Vulture is about the Biafran War in Nigeria which began in 1967 between the Hausa and Yoruba tribes. The poem is also about the concentration camps in Biafra. The theme of the poem is to show a contrast between good and evil. The poet uses metaphoric images of vulture to describe how a person or creature can be horrific and disgusting and do evil, horrific things but somewhere deep down inside there is a tiny spark of goodness and love.

"Then the commandant at Belsen Camp going home for the day with boxes of human meat - bringing secretly to his lady comrade will stop at the vegetable market and pick up a chicken for his tender offspring." This stanza is clearly contrasts good and evil. A commandant will go home to his family with goodness for his children and when he is a completely different person, a loving father and a loving husband.

The theme is similar to that in the poem "What were they like?" The US Forces killed many innocent men, women and children and caused devastating effects to the countries land and lives of millions in order to win a war. Only when they realized the horror they had caused and that it was too late, they realized they just to the war returned home to they families to live happily ever after.

Although the themes of the poems are practically the same each poet delivers their point in different ways and also describe different aspects of war. Chinese Achille choose to describe war from the side of the commandant and soldiers and Denise Levertov choose to describe war from the side of the countries people and how war affected them.
